

Guide to types of light bulb

This is a bayonet cap or BC type light bulb. It's LED and you'll find it in most of your ceiling pendants, ceiling roses around the house: bedrooms, halls, landings that sort of thing.

This is a similar bulb; it has a different type of fitting. This is an Edison screw or ES type light bulb. It's still LED and they are mostly found in outdoor lights. So at the front porch or maybe at the back of the property.

You might find one of these in your ceiling rose, it's an old-fashioned energy saving lamp. If you take it to your supermarket, you should be able to find one that matches but it's a four pin compact fluorescent and it clicks up into the ceiling rose.

You'll find this type of lamp in any reset spotlights you have in your house perhaps in the kitchen or the bathroom. It's called a GU10 fitting, it's LED and you can find it at most supermarkets. You'll need to be careful when removing this lamp because it needs to be twisted and pulled not just pulled.

This type of lamp, you'll find in sealed units in your kitchen or bathroom. It's a 28 watt, 2D fitting and you can pick it up from most supermarkets.

So remember when you're changing light bulbs, you can recycle all of these at most larger supermarkets.
